RESEARCH FIELDS

International Trade, International Finance, Empirical Macroeconomics, Chinese Economy

RESEARCH INTERESTS

Exchange Rate, Trade Network, Global Sourcing, Financial Frictions, Monetary Policy, Risk Hedging

PUBLICATIONS

1. "Exchange Rate Pass-Through and Importers' Credit Constraints: Evidence from China" with Yao Amber Li and Tengyu Zhao, Journal of Economic Behavior & Organization 236 (2025): 107044.
    - Presented at (2025) YES*; (2024) JIMF-SUFE*, ATW
    - Summary: The average exchange rate pass-through (ERPT) into import prices in China is around 73%. Tighter financial constraints of importers amplifies ERPT into import prices. In opposite, greater sourcing diversity of importers reduces import ERPT. We develop a model of bilateral negotiation to rationalize empirical patterns.

WORKING PAPERS

1. "Import-Export Linkages as a Channel for Exchange Rate Hedging", 2025

   - Job Market Paper
   - Presented at (2026) AMES-E/SE, AMES-China, RMET, SHUFE, ATW; (2025) CTRG, XMU, HKUST, Columbia
   - Summary: Firms naturally hedge exchange-rate risk via import–export linkages. Chinese customs data show import- and export-weighted shocks offset, elasticities are attenuated for two-way traders, and origin-market overlap further dampens transmission. A tractable model explains risk-adjusted pricing and sourcing reallocation; counterfactuals quantify hedging across trade structures and exchange rate environments.

2. "The Spill-back and Spillover Effects of US Monetary Policy: Evidence on an International Cost Channel" with Yao Amber Li, Shang-Jin Wei, and Jingbo Yao, Revise and Resubmit at Journal of Monetary Economics, 2025

   - Available as NBER Working Paper Series No. w33811, May 2025.
   - Presented at (2025) CEA, ESWC, SNU-Yonsei*, IEFS-China*, ICEE-PSU-Altoona, CES-China*, HKIMR-ECB-BOFIT*; (2024) CTRG, Melbourne Macro Policy*, NBER-China*, AMES-E/SE, CICF*, HKUST-Fudan-SMU*, AMES-China*, AsianFA, IAAE, NBER-EASE*, IEJC-Shenzhen*, ATW*, EITI*
   - Summary: Unexpected US monetary tightening raises both US import prices ("spill-back") and foreign import prices ("spillover"), contrary to standard open-economy models. Evidence from Chinese exporters indicates a borrowing-cost channel: tighter monetary policy worsens liquidity, amplifying trade price increases, especially for firms facing higher financing costs or tighter liquidity.
